Full Day Workshop

Understanding, Treating and Managing School Refusal

School refusal is a very common and challenging mental health problem for schools. Only a third to half of adolescents with school refusal will ultimately return to school. Those students who do not return to school suffer serious disadvantage related to employment, relationships and social functioning in adult life. This interactive, one day workshop discusses the causes, co-morbidities and treatment of school refusal.

An Essential PD Workshop for Teachers and Leadership Personnel, School Counsellors & Psychologists

School refusal will occur in almost every school. The consequences can be very serious for young people and it is vital that school personnel have an understanding of how to treat the disorder, how it should be managed in the school context, and how to effectively involve the family.

A/Professor Michael Gordon, Psychiatrist, has extensive experience working with schools on issues of mental health relating to young people. A/Professor Gordon provides training and professional mentoring for educational leaders, teachers, school psychologists and counsellors and is ideally placed to take participants through the myriad and complex issues involved in adolescent mental illness in the school context.
